Teaching Philosophy:

I believe that teaching is for the moral, ethical, intellectual development of the students. Through reading about people and lives unlike themselves students ability to critically analyze the world and situations around them will develop independently of their teachers and peers and they will become active citizens in and of the world. Most importantly they will develop their own sense of social justice through reading, discussion and critical thinking.

Summary of Qualifications:

Currently a senior at Michigan State University dual enrolled in the English major program and secondary Education Department to become a high school English teacher with a global education focus. Has studied three years of high school Japanese and two years of college level French with numerous experiences abroad to support obtaining a TESOL minor. Understands and can use Microsoft office, prezi, icloud, weebly, smartboards and many other technologies.

Tutoring and Observing:

Refugee Development Center (2009) worked in a help room for ESL students with all grades from middle school to college, especially focused on writing. 20 hours.

Eastern High School (2010) worked in a senior English special needs classroom observing and tutoring one on one with students who struggled to keep up, especially focused on critical analysis. 20 hours.

Otto Middle School (2011) in a 6th grade English classroom for two class periods tutoring one on one with ESL students. These students were beginners to intermediate and we spent most of our time on vocabulary, syntax, semantics, and phonology with respect to the content of their 6th grade course. 20 + hours.

Refugee Development Center (summer program) (2011) the students were split into a high school and a middle school group both of whom I tutored, observed, and taught. I also had extensive practice planning lessons and sitting in on the teacher meetings. 20 + hours.

Charlotte High School (2011-2012) observing, one-on-one tutoring and occasionally teaching 12th grade English, especially focused on implementing lesson plans. Current placement.
